In 1937 Stevenson and his wife, the former Ellen Borden, from whom he was divorced in 1949, decided to build a house in the country. Six weeks after they had moved into it, the house caught fire on an evening when they were not at home. By the time the Stevensons reached the scene of the conflagration, it was too late for anyone to do much except stand around and watch the structure burn to the ground.

One of the neighbors who was near Stevenson in the crowd of spectators edged over to express his sympathy. As he did so a bit of burning debris floated through the air and dropped at the owner's feet. Stevenson picked it up and calmly lit a cigarette with it.

"Oh, well," he said, "as you can see, we are still using the house."

Conscience—Not Flippancy Stevenson's ability to achieve minor mots in moments of stress is less the result of flippancy on the structure of the structure of the structure of the contagration of the structure of the contagration of the structure of the contagration of the united States. From such dread responsibility one does not shrink in fear, self-interest or humility. But great political parties, like great nations have no indispensable man, and last January before I was even considered for the Presidency, I announced that I would seek re-election as Governor of Illinois. Last week I was nominated in the Democratic primary. It is the highest office within the gift of the citizens of Illinois, and its power for good or ill over their lives is correspondingly great. No one should lightly aspire to it or lightly abandon the quest once begun.

"The long agony that followed was never about what I wanted to do—I had already settled that. It was the result of an increasing increasing the presume than embarrass or missent the new presume than embarrass or missent the new presume than embarrass or missent the presume than embarrass or missent the presume than embarrass or missent the new presume than embarrass or missent the new presume than embarrass or missen minor mots in moments of stress is less the result of flippancy on his part than of an overly strict conscience which obliges him to set himself unusually high standards of efficiency and deportment. And it forbids him to seek the sympathy of outsiders. Thus, on the occasion of the fire, to have betrayed his inward feelings would be seed to sufficiency and the common sense to get a series of the common sense to get a series of the common sense to get a series of the common sense to get a sense of the common sense of the common sense to get a sense of the common sense of the common sense to get a sense of the common sen
